

After consulting with my classmates, I feel very confident about my design choices. Overall, they like my color pallet and font choices as well as my layout. The one thing that they advised me to do was to make my contact information more accessible. They suggested that I create another page on my navigation bar solely dedicated to contacting me. Although I understand their concern, I personally disagree. I think that my footer with my contact information will be accessible and simple enough for people to use. However, to avoid possible confusion if people do not see the footer, I think that I will include my contact information on my about/home page in a separate paragraph. I think that this is a reasonable compromise to their criticism. Other than that, all I received was praise for my design layouts.

I found the review very helpful. It was nice to get feedback on my choices and hear their concerns. While reviewing the work of my peers, I learned about the different possibilities that we are capable of with coding. After seeing Sydney's decision to use a highly contrasting design for her home page, I considered it myself, and although I decided against it, it was nice to consider it as a possibility.
